National Center on Sexual Exploitation Honors Canopy with Technology Solutions Award

Canopy's pioneering technology protects children online with 99% accuracy

Canopy, a leading innovator in internet protection software, has been awarded the Technology Solutions Award from the National Center on Sexual Exploitation (NCOSE) for their groundbreaking pornography-blocking technology. The award recognizes companies and organizations that are developing technology-based solutions that combat sexual abuse and exploitation.

"The fight against pornography has never been more pressing," said Sean Clifford, founder of Canopy. "It used to be that kids had to seek out porn; today, they can't avoid it, and this has real consequences for the mental health of our children. We're pleased to be recognized by NCOSE and to partner with them on their mission to stop abuse and make the online world a safer place."

NCOSE is the leading organization exposing the links between all forms of sexual abuse and exploitation, including the intersection of sexual abuse and exploitation with technology. They partner with leaders and organizations which are committed to defending human dignity and preserving and protecting human flourishing. The NCOSE Technology Solutions Award recognizes innovators like Canopy for their efforts to keep children and other victims safe from perpetrators of sexual misconduct.

Canopy empowers families to experience a safer internet. Canopy's app blocks pornography that other filters miss, using a patented technology that identifies pornographic images and videos with greater than 99% accuracy. Unlike other filters, it allows your child to view appropriate content on websites while filtering out what's inappropriate on the same site. It's also the only app in the world that can stop sexting using image recognition.

"Technology doesn't have to be confusing or dangerous. With Canopy, parents can rest easy knowing their children are safe, no matter where their digital adventures take them," noted NCOSE in their announcement.

Canopy's technology is already used on more than 2 million devices worldwide. For more information visit canopy.us.
